Lawrence S. Ting School in Vietnam, established in 2008, shares a deep connection with Taipei First Girls High School. Its founder was a former principal of our school, and the current principal also once taught here. This visit marks the return of students from Lawrence S. Ting School to Taipei First Girls High School after 11 years.

On the afternoon of July 13, the student ambassadors went to Taipei Hero House to welcome the students from Lawrence S. Ting School. They greeted the visitors warmly and began a tour of Taipei Old Town. The tour, led by our school's ambassadors, took them to landmarks such as 228 Peace Memorial Park and the North Gate, where they learned about Taipei's history. Despite the blazing sun, the students remained enthusiastic and returned to Taipei First Girls High School with smiles and laughter.

First, the principals of both schools delivered speeches. The principal of Taipei First Girls High School and the principal of Lawrence S. Ting School each noted that, despite the years since their last student exchange, they had kept in touch and hoped to strengthen their friendship through this visit. Following the speeches, the schools exchanged gifts: Taipei First Girls High School gave an HBL jacket and a shirt, while Lawrence S. Ting School presented Vietnamese cashews.

Next, the student ambassadors gave fluent presentations about Taiwan and Taipei First Girls High School, showcasing their professionalism with engaging Q&A sessions. Following this, students from Lawrence S. Ting School presented the features of their school and shared insights into their school life. Later, the students from both schools enjoyed snacks in the corridor of the Guang-Fu Building. They had a great time exchanging social media contacts and sharing cultural experiences from their respective countries.

After chatting with each other, the ambassadors guided the students from Lawrence S. Ting School on a tour of the campus and the school history room. With detailed explanations from the ambassadors, the Lawrence S. Ting students not only expressed their appreciation but also gained a deeper understanding of Taipei First Girls High School's campus and history. During the tour, students from both schools took the opportunity to capture precious group photos at various spots around the school.

Lastly, it was time for a group photo to mark the end of the program. The farewell took place in front of the carriage porch at the Guang-Fu Building and the Presidential Office Building, where the ambassadors and students from Lawrence S. Ting School said their goodbyes with a touch of reluctance. The students had shown great passion and enthusiasm throughout the program, and everyone looked forward to strengthening their bonds and creating unforgettable memories through future interactions.
